

Voters Guide: Lowcountry Edition

With the primary campaign season starting in dead Ernest (apologies to anyone with deceased loved ones of that name) and many South Carolina Republican candidates claiming to be Ronald Reagan reincarnated, SouthCarolinaConservative.com suggests the following five questions to help you make your candidate selection.

Available in Upstate and Lowcountry editions at www.SouthCarolinaConservative.com. Print it out and take it with you when you meet the candidates.

1. How does the candidate treat you personally? (Suggestion: try wearing different name tags at different events to see if the candidate really knows you.)
2. How do the candidate's relatives treat you? (Example: if the candidate's fourth cousin called your grandfather a dirty, filthy, self-serving Carpetbaggin' Yankee in kindergarten in 1947, this would not be good.)
3. Has the candidate sponsored an event and provided food? (Pizza is a definite plus, especially with extra toppings. Cheese pizza is a sign of a candidate who means well but cannot raise campaign funds.) Krispy Kreme Doughnuts are a hit at breakfast events.
4. Does the candidate attend my church or a pagan one?
5. And most importantly, is the candidate a Gamecocks fan? (Note: being a Clemson fan disqualifies even the truest Reagan Conservative. (Note: please see Upstate edition.)

Voters Guide: Lowcountry Edition

With the primary campaign season starting in dead Ernest (apologies to anyone with deceased loved ones of that name) and many South Carolina Republican candidates claiming to be Ronald Reagan reincarnated, SouthCarolinaConservative.com suggests the following five questions to help you make your candidate selection.

Available in Upstate and Lowcountry editions at www.SouthCarolinaConservative.com. Print it out and take it with you when you meet the candidates.

1. How does the candidate treat you personally? (Suggestion: try wearing different name tags at different events to see if the candidate really knows you.)
2. How do the candidate's relatives treat you? (Example: if the candidate's fourth cousin called your grandfather a dirty, filthy, self-serving Carpetbaggin' Yankee in kindergarten in 1947, this would not be good.)
3. Has the candidate sponsored an event and provided food? (Pizza is a definite plus, especially with extra toppings. Cheese pizza is a sign of a candidate who means well but cannot raise campaign funds.) Krispy Kreme Doughnuts are a hit at breakfast events.
4. Does the candidate attend my church or a pagan one?
5. And most importantly, is the candidate a Gamecocks fan? (Note: being a Clemson fan disqualifies even the truest Reagan Conservative. (Note: please see Upstate edition.)

Voters Guide: Low Country Edition

With the primary campaign season starting in dead Ernest (apologies to anyone with deceased loved ones of that name) and many South Carolina Republican candidates claiming to be Ronald Reagan reincarnated, SouthCarolinaConservative.com suggests the following five questions to help you make your candidate selection.

Available in Upstate and Lowcountry editions at www.SouthCarolinaConservative.com. Print it out and take it with you when you meet the candidates.

1. How does the candidate treat you personally? (Suggestion: try wearing different name tags at different events to see if the candidate really knows you.)
2. How do the candidate's relatives treat you? (Example: if the candidate's fourth cousin called your grandfather a dirty, filthy, self-serving Carpetbaggin' Yankee in kindergarten in 1947, this would not be good.)
3. Has the candidate sponsored an event and provided food? (Pizza is a definite plus, especially with extra toppings. Cheese pizza is a sign of a candidate who means well but cannot raise campaign funds.) Krispy Kreme Doughnuts are a hit at breakfast events.
4. Does the candidate attend my church or a pagan one?
5. And most importantly, is the candidate a Gamecocks fan? (Note: being a Clemson fan disqualifies even the truest Reagan Conservative. (Note: please see Upstate edition.)

Voters Guide: Lowcountry Edition

With the primary campaign season starting in dead Ernest (apologies to anyone with deceased loved ones of that name) and many South Carolina Republican candidates claiming to be Ronald Reagan reincarnated, SouthCarolinaConservative.com suggests the following five questions to help you make your candidate selection.

Available in Upstate and Lowcountry editions at www.SouthCarolinaConservative.com. Print it out and take it with you when you meet the candidates.

1. How does the candidate treat you personally? (Suggestion: try wearing different name tags at different events to see if the candidate really knows you.)
2. How do the candidate's relatives treat you? (Example: if the candidate's fourth cousin called your grandfather a dirty, filthy, self-serving Carpetbaggin' Yankee in kindergarten in 1947, this would not be good.)
3. Has the candidate sponsored an event and provided food? (Pizza is a definite plus, especially with extra toppings. Cheese pizza is a sign of a candidate who means well but cannot raise campaign funds.) Krispy Kreme Doughnuts are a hit at breakfast events.
4. Does the candidate attend my church or a pagan one?
5. And most importantly, is the candidate a Gamecocks fan? (Note: being a Clemson fan disqualifies even the truest Reagan Conservative. (Note: please see Upstate edition.)